WHO WROTE HAGAR, THE MARTYR?

Who is not the Authoress of FASHION AND FAMINE?

Messrs. Bunce & Brothers, of New York, have recently, and for manifestly selfish and mercenary ends, set up a very stupid assumption, and are now, in a seeming spirit of most virtuous indignation, doing all in their power to knock it down. The assumption is that the authoress of "Fashion and Famine"—Mrs. Ann S. Stepheos.—has been reputed to be the authoress of "Hagar, the Martyr." Now, we have given Bunce & Brothers no reason whatever for assuming any conclusion of the sort and in looking over the numerous favorable notices of "Hagar, the Martyr." which have appeared in the public prints, we can find no authority on which to base such an apprehension. The authoress has, with two exceptions, been stated, in these notices referred to, to be Mrs. H. Marion Stephens; and these two exceptions were the Boston Times and Transcript, both of which papers spoke of Mrs. Stephens as the Mrs. Stephens, of Boston, and not Mrs. Ann S. Stephens, of New York, whom, we institled in saying, neither of the editors alluded to had in their minds at the time they penned their notices.

But, supposing the public should confound the names and not Mrs. Ans. S. Stephens, of New York, whom, we are justified in saying, neither of the editors alluded to had in their minds at the time they penned their notices.

But, supposing the public should confound the names of the two ladies, it is not therefore at all uncertain that Mrs. Ann S. Stephens would be highly complimented by the mistake. Nay, it is absolutely reasonable that she will, or ought to be; for, if we mistake not, the book published by Bunce & Brothers, under the title of "Fashion and Pamine." has a singular affinity in all respects to one previously and fugitively known as "Prisons and Palaces: or Sequel to the Strawberry Girl." Mrs. Stephens—that is, Mrs. H Marion Stephens—is no collator, but the authoress of an enirely criginal work, and in this respect would not likely, by parties interested, be willfully placed on the level of a mere compiler and patcher up of oil and exploded materials: It is, therefore, under the circumstances, entirely unnecessary and uncalled for on the part of Measrs. Bunce & Brothers, to notify the public that Mrs. H. Marion Stephens is not the authoress of "Fashion and Framine." That lady has fame enough, independently of what she would derive from such a relationship and in evidence of this we cull from a very numerous and ungarbled extracts—

"The plot is excellent the ideas fine, and the language boid and for-fible. She wields a graphic and a caustic pen, while, at the same time, many of her sentences are models of tenderness and love in their noblest and best sense."—[Newport (R. I.) Journal.

"Hagar the Martyr," is a, tale of great power, in which the ability of the writer is strikingly exhibited."

[Salem Observer.

"Mrs. Stephens has a distinguished reputation as a poetes, and the work referred to establishes her alain to rank as one of our best female prose writers. Without any sickly sentimentality the best abones in pathos and passages of exquasite beauty."—[Ballou's (late Gleason's) Fictorial.

"This work is one of the most interesting and exciting rom

"The eminence in the literary world to which Mrs.
Staphens has already attained may well be held as security, against mediocrity; but Hagar stands far above that stature. It is avowedly founded on fact, and its details are wrought up in a style calculated to awaken many to the appreciation of a propriety of conduct they details are wrought up in a style calculated to awaken many to the appreciation of a propriety of conduct they may hitherto have disregarded. Hagar is emphatically a plainly written lesson of reform in a department of social life whence flows everything for good or evil, as virtuous or victous direction may be given it. Its descriptions are striking, and its characters original and varied."—[Concord Patriot and Gazette.

"The characters are very highly drawn, and the work is one of the most exciting interest; one of those heart stories which seem the peculiar province of Mrs. Stephens' pen,"—[Nantucket Inquirer.

"A fair representation of many of the trials and struggles which young women, without friends, are constantly beset with, the more particularly in city life."—[Boston Bee.

"We can heartily recommend Hagar to all who would read an ably written and highly interesting romance. It is a book that ought to have as great arun as "Ida May," for it is spirited, free-spoken, and written with amazing vigor."—[Boston Times.
